

Transfer of Land Amendment Bill 2018

EXPLANATORY MEMORANDUM

Background

The Transfer of Land Amendment Bill 2018 has been drafted to improve and streamline conveyancing in Western Australia, and will further enable electronic operations of the state's land titles register. These amendments are part of the move towards national electronic conveyancing and permit the Western Australian land titles register to operate in an electronic environment.

This Bill amends three key areas of the Transfer of Land Act 1893 (TLA). It:

1. Modifies the definition of counterpart documents to improve the processing of mortgages electronically;
2. Enables electronic service of many types of notice under the TLA; and
3. Removes duplicate certificates of title from the conveyancing process, resulting in greater ability to conduct land transactions in a fully electronic environment.

Consequential amendments will be made to other Acts to facilitate these amendments.

1. Counterpart documents and improving the processing of mortgages electronically

Financial institutions have requested greater certainty around the enforceability of mortgages lodged electronically with Landgate. Currently, under the TLA there are legislative impediments to signing mortgages in an electronic format, via an Electronic Lodgement Network.

Although the legislation was amended in 2014 with the intent of enabling electronic mortgages, currently the TLA provides that the paper mortgage signed by the borrower must be exactly the same as the electronic version of the mortgage held by the financial institution and lodged at Landgate. This is because it could be interpreted as rendering a mortgage unenforceable even if there are minor, immaterial differences between the mortgage signed by the borrower in a hard copy format and the electronic version held by the lender and lodged at Landgate. This uncertainty is an unintended consequence of drafting and if not corrected has the potential to undermine industry uptake of eConveyancing.

Specifically, the provisions for counterpart documents are being amended to better account for differences in the same document, particularly where the document exists in paper and digital mediums. In addition to obvious differences such as a physical signature versus a digital signature, other subtle differences need to be accounted for, such as differences in the approved form for paper and electronic counterparts of the same document.

2. Electronic Service of Notice

This Bill provides for electronic notice to issue in a majority of circumstances, which will streamline informal and formal notices served under the TLA.

Notices issued by the Registrar of Titles or the Commissioner of Titles may be served on registered owners or persons lodging land transaction documents at Landgate under the TLA in several circumstances. With advancements in technology and a reduction in paper-based mail as a method of service, the current notice provisions of the TLA do not provide enough flexibility for the administration of a modern land registry. This can result in an inability to serve notices and a lack of clarity as to when a notice has been delivered.

For example, if notice was unsuccessfully served by post, the current legislation gives limited flexibility to the potential actions that can be taken. Another notice can be sent, in a different format (such as email), or service of notice can be dispensed with entirely. However, these flexible provisions only apply to notices delivered by post, not email. This means that there is no clear pathway to action if an email notice is not successfully delivered. This results in email not being as useful as it might be. Changes are sought which will provide greater flexibility into the future.

Another example is that the current TLA gives several different time periods for service of notice to be deemed to have occurred – on the next business day if within the metro area, or the second business day if not in the metro area. Postal delivery dates have been changing recently, and it would provide for more flexibility if the detail about how a notice can be served and when a notice is deemed to have been served is moved to the Regulations under the TLA rather than being in the TLA itself. Putting the notice provisions that are currently in the Act into the Regulations permits a more flexible response to changes in how notices can be sent and will allow Landgate to keep pace with advances in technology.

Without these changes, claims against the Registrar of Titles could occur, as well as extended delays in processing documents.

The proposed changes relating to notices also seek to deal with notices issued under documents that are lodged at Landgate. It preserves the existing method of service of notices under existing documents registered at Landgate but provides that all documents that are lodged at Landgate after the commencement of the Bill can provide for an electronic means of service such as by email as opposed to facsimile machine.

3. Duplicate Certificates of Title removed, resulting in greater ability to conduct land transactions in a fully electronic environment

Under the land titles registration system created under the TLA, the premise that it was based upon was that Landgate as the land registry would hold the paper certificate of title and the owner of the land would hold a duplicate of that paper certificate of title.

Since 1996 the TLA was amended to permit the Registrar of Titles to hold the land title register in any media or medium. Currently the Registrar holds all certificates of title in a digital format. Persons who are entitled to a duplicate of the certificate of title can request the duplicate certificate of title to not be issued.

Duplicate certificates of title are hard copy documents which significantly limit the ability to conduct land transactions in a fully electronic environment. As more processes have become automated, the higher cost of handling paper documents has become an important issue for participants in the land registration process. Financial institutions now actively discourage the issue of duplicate certificates of title as security against a mortgage. As a result, the issue of duplicate certificates of title has been decreasing rapidly since they became optional in 1996. For example, in 2011 approximately 18% of freehold certificates of title had no duplicate issued. In 2017, this figure has risen to over 47%, and this trend appears set to continue.

Under the paper-based title system the duplicate certificate of title was incorrectly seen to be prima facie evidence of ownership of the land and of the right to transact on the land. However, the duplicate can never be relied on as showing that the person who has the duplicate certificate of title is the true owner of the land and therefore has the right to deal with the land. It is arguable that the very existence of a duplicate certificate of title increases the risk of fraud as it may enable a fraudster to perpetrate a fraud.

The introduction of the Registrar and Commissioner of Titles 'Verification of Identity' practice now operates as a safer mechanism to transact land where the parties to the transaction are required to be verified as to their identity and their right to deal with the land. This critical precondition to transact in land is independent of the possession of the paper duplicate certificate of title.

Queensland and South Australia have already removed duplicate certificates of title. The issue of removing duplicate certificates of title has been consulted on over many years as part of the national electronic conveyancing initiative. Financial institutions, consumer groups, conveyancers and lawyers are aware of the future goal of removing these hard copy documents to further promote electronic conveyancing. Financial institutions have indicated a keenness to remove the currently optional requirement to issue a duplicate. The proposal is not to immediately create this change, but rather to provide in drafting for a Proclamation date in the future. It is intended that a further community awareness campaign be run to prepare industry for the change.
